Development of this site will cut off Pyrford Common from the rest of the countryside. Land on this side of the Pyrford Common Road is rich in wildlife; I observed seven bumble bee species and common lizards while doing an Open University Ecology Unit field project there in 1996. %0A%0AIt will also be incongruous being opposite Pyrford Court and the stable block (now residences) adjoining Pyrford Court. These are some of the few of the older buildings left on this side of the railway way line in the vicinity of Woking, most of the older buildings of the Woking town centre itself along with the Oriental University Institute now having been destroyed.%0A%0AThe ancient monument stone by the driveway of Pyrford Court will be more liable to vandalism with more passer-bys. %0A
